The laws surrounding IEPs and Section 504 plans remain unchanged; they have not been repealed, and there are no waivers. Federal and state timelines are still in effect.

Parents and families should continue to advocate for the services their children need.

Schools must continue to follow IDEA and Section 504 laws and work with parents to determine how services can be effectively delivered.

Schools need to ensure that students with special education needs get the support they require, whether they’re learning in a school building or remotely.

Parents can still request an IEP team meeting at any time.
